On April 23 (Children's Reading Day), 2013, the International Library of Children's Literature (ILCL) released a digital exhibition “Children’s Books in the Victorian Era: from the Winnington-Ingram Collection.”

The ILCL, a library specializing in children's books, collects and preserves children's books published in Japan, as well as a wide range of works from abroad, including those now regarded as classics. One of the ILCL's special collections is the Winnington-Ingram Collection of Children's Books comprising works of children's literature of Great Britain from the 18th to 20th centuries.

Drawing on this Collection, this exhibition presents books representative of the 19th century, at the dawn of modern children's literature, to explore the origins of contemporary children's books.

We have taken special care to enable visitors to enjoy the contents of as many books as possible. Some of the exhibits are fully digitized and viewable on “the NDL Digitized Contents”, and additional information is provided on books that can be consulted cover-to-cover in the International Children's Digital Library \(ICDL\) or the Internet Archive.

Enjoy the imaginary universe of children's books of the Victorian era, at the dawn of children's literature!
